HIAWATHASLIED.

[BY HEINRICH VON LONGFELLOW.]

Up and spake the mighty Kaiser.

Spake the mighty Kaiser Wilhelm, Wilhelm of the throne of Prussia, Of the House of Hohenzollern, Spake he bravely, after dinner, After honoring the toast-list, After toasting everybody, After roasting everybody, After shouting "Hoek" and "Prosit" (Not to mention "Heck and Seltzer"):

After all the great tamasha, Spake the Kaiser to his brother, His Imperial and Royal Highness Henry, Prince and brother, Spake the Kaiser, as reported In the German daily papers, Which are subject to a censor, And were therefore quite unable To give out a faulty version Or to misreport the Kaiser:

"Henry, my beloved brother, Go to those benighted heathen, In the far-off land of China, Go and preach my sacred gospel, Teach them that I am the Kaiser, Teach them that there is no other, Teach them that I have no equal—I am I—get on to that now; That is all there is about it. Teach them this, my brother Henry; If they will not listen, hit 'em! (If you think that they will let you; If they'll take the hitting meekly) Hit 'em hard, and hit 'em heavy! Hit 'em quick, and hit 'em often; With your mailed fist go hit 'em; Mailed fists are fine persuaders. Mailed fists are most convincing. With your mailed fist, then, hit 'em When you're tired of hitting, kick 'em."

Kick 'em, hit 'em, hit 'em, kick 'em, With the hob-nailed boot of Prussia, With the mailed fist of ditto Hit 'em on the blooming boko, Kick 'em on the shins and ankles, Kick 'em on the tiffinbasket, Hit 'em till you tap their claret, Kick 'em till they dislike sitting. What else is a mailed fist for? What are hob-nailed boots designed for? Did I not design a picture (Or cartoon, or else conundrum) Or at least I did the talking And an artist did the picture— Calling on the Western nations To protect their cherished treasures (Meaning me, though there are others) From the deadly Yellow Peril? Good old motto, self protection! Go, now, Henry, go to China, And protect our cherished treasures— What are cherished treasures made for? If they do not need protecting? If you want to know what danger To protect them from, I'll tell you— From the warlike men of China, From the military Manchu, From the Hunanese heroic, From the "braves" all over China— From all these you must protect them.

If the Chinese are not fighting, Maskee—hit 'em all the harder! Paie, paie toa paucurgon, Kai taraxipposatron, Kai telonen kai pharanges, Kai Charybdis harpages! Mailed fists and hob-nailed bluchers, Go, my Henry Hiawatha, Go unto the sleeping dragon, Turn your face toward the sunrise, Let the sight of that inspire you, Take the Gefion, the cruiser, And the Deutschland, the steam-roller, Or pantechneon, or wagon For conveying railway luggage, You will also have the Kaiser, And the Kaiserin Augusta, And the Kormoran, the sea-bird, And the Moewe, the Shu shu-ga, And the West Wind, old No-ko-mis, Will befriend you when you're coal-less.

When your bunkers all are empty, When you haven't any fuel, Not enough to cook your supper, Let alone to feed the boilers; Not a scrap of tallow candle, Nor a matchbox in your pocket— Then the western wind will help you Till you reach some coaling station, Where you bet your bottom dollar There will be a damdenglander, With some coal in his possession. He will covet filthy lucre. He will seek you for some money He will haggle, he will barter He will fill your empty bunkers. He will mend your busted boilers, If your mailed fist wants mending, If there is a screw loose somewhere, Or if you have lost a rivet From your armor-plated gauntlet, From your ironclad menagerie, If a joint should need repairing, If a boiler-tube is leaky, Get the Britisher to help you. Britishers are partly German;

Half the race, and all the rulers, Are Teutonic by extraction; So are all their Highland pipers, Fighting Afghan Fuzzy-wuzzles; They and we are more than cousins. And ubiquitous we both are, And we get on well together. So, the British coaling stations, And the dockyards of the British Will be very handy for you. If you don't see what you're wanting In the window, enter, asking, They will treat you most politely." Quoth the Kaiser, "I have spoken!"

Then went Henry Hiawatha Forth before the eyes of nations, Mid the "Dreimal Hoek" et cetera, Forcibly to preach the gospel Of his Sacred Lord the Kaiser. Came he latsling out of Suez, Came he lingering to Aden, Came a little distance further, And the cycle tyre was punctured, And the lily drooped and fainted, And the lion roared in whispers, And the taffrail-log grew quiet, And the screw had ceased from screwing and the weary crank had rest.

But the West Wind, old Nokomis, And the British boiler makers, And the Cardiff coal purveyors Came and helped him on a bit.

And at last Hongkong was sighted, Sighted on the Doughty Deutschland, Sighted on the giddy Gefion, Sighted by Imperial Henry, By the modern Hiawatha, And the bunkers ceased from bunking and the anchor sank to rest.

Now turn on the Sacred Gospel Of the Holy Lord the Kaiser! Turn it on these damdenglanders, Turn it on the jeering journals, Turn it on the sneering scribblers, On the jeering, sneering, nothing-fearing fiends of pen and ink!

By the power of German Censor, By the law of lese-majestat, By the terrors of the dungeons, By the fierce, ferocious fury, By the punishment of pressmen, In the happy Fatherland, They have shown you little pity, They avenge themselves upon you They repay your persecution With a persecution grand!

You have shown them little mercy, You have pitilessly crushed them, You have played the paltry tyrant With your victims of the Press, Now they raise a laugh against you, Loud and long, the whole world over, Laugh as never man was laughed at, Like your own self—merciless.

We, too, have a gospel, Henry, Sacred gospel, mighty gospel. And we have a mailed fist, You can tell your Holy Lord, He must learn before he teaches; He should hear before he preaches; For the pen that pricks his speeches Is as mighty as his sword.

HONGKONG, March 9th.

HAWAII.

(THROUGH REUTER'S AGENCY.)

WASHINGTON, March 21st.

With reference to the report of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate issued on the 17th inst., charging Great Britain with having designs on Hawaii, if not with actually fomenting a movement for the restoration of the Monarchy, Sir Julian Pauncefote, acting under instructions from his Government, today informed the State Department that the Committee of the Senate were under an entire misapprehension, and that there was no ground whatever for the allegations contained in their report.—The London Times.
